

GOVERNANCE

Good governance is the bedrock of all successful organizations.

THE POWER OF BEING UNDERSTOOD

The implementation of good governance is critical as it indicates the values and culture in your organization. It will also attract investors and increase their confidence to invest in your organization.

Good governance is the bedrock of all successful organizations. If this goes wrong the ramifications can be deeply damaging. Where organizations get it right they can become more efficient, more effective and better at delivering what their customers want.

It is quite straightforward really: the less that goes wrong in your organization, the less (unexpected) cost you will incur when putting it right.

The common traps that organizations face:

- governance overload – spending all your time managing your governance frameworks, instead of focusing on your core operations
- reacting to external factors and implementing governance frameworks to comply, rather than being proactive and implementing governance frameworks to drive the organization
- set and forget – are your governance frameworks still relevant to your organization?

The reality is that few organizations take stock and ensure their governance arrangements are as effective as they should or could be. This often only changes when the organization is driven by regulators to do so, or when the cracks are starting to show – though by then it is often too late.
